Iraq Tells U.S. It Will Use French Jets to Press Iran

By Don Oberdorfer Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Iraq has informed the United States that it intends to use five new French warplanes to bring to a head its threecar war against Iran, an action that would create serious new risks to U.S. interests in the Gulf and to the world's oil supply.

The Iraqi decision to change the tempo and direction of the war. dieved to have been made in Baghdad during the summer, was transmitted to officials in Washington in clear and forceful terms in recent weeks, according to State

The knowledge of Iraq's inten-tions, as well as Iran's threats to retaliate by closing the Gulf to all oil shipping, had increased concern in the Reagan administration even before the news media reported that five Super Etendards, capable of firing Exoret air-to-surface mis-siles, left a French sir base for Iraq

Reason ship which a created 920 miles of the created 920 miles of the created which on Friday. [Informed sources in Paris reported Sunday that the five jets had arrived in Iraq, The Associated Press reported

[Iran denied Sunday that it would close the strategic Strait of Hormuz, connecting the Gulf and the Gulf of Oman, if Iraq took delivery of French fighter bombers but said it would do so if Iran's oil exports were blocked, United Press International reported, quoting the official radio.

In anticipation of a new crisis in the Gulf, a battle group that in-cludes the sircraft carrier Ranger was moved recently from Central America to the Indian Ocean. The British aircraft carrier Invincible has also arrived in the area. An official said the British flotilla was likely to remain until February.

A State Department statement on Sept. 28, reiterating a statement of two months ago, said the United States "would view with grave concern" any attempt to interfere with commercial traffic in the Gulf, the world's most important artery of international oil commerce trolled Senate next week.

The initial weeks of the war, which began with an Iraqi attack on Iran in September 1980, created increased concern in Washington about the continued supply of pe-troleum through the Gulf. This led to the dispatch to Sandi Arabia of U.S. Air Force airborne warning and control system (AWACS) ar-craft — which still remain on duty there — and the stepped-up de-ployment of naval forces in the area by the United States and its allies, including France, Since then the war has claimed more than 100,000 lives, according to U.S. official estimates, and some unofficial estimates are that it has left as many as 250,000 dead. After the failure of a "human wave" offensive in February of this year, Iran flirted briefly with the idea of a responsated settlement but eventually settled down to a war of attrition against its smaller neighbor. "It has been almost like a medieval siege, and it has been hurting Iraq," a U.S. official said.

Because of war damage to its oil-loading facilities at the head of the Gulf and the cutoff of its Syrian oil pipeline by the antagonistic regime in Damascus, Iraq is able to export only about 700,000 barrels per day of its principal economic resource, compared with about five times as much before the war.

Moreover, in recent months Saudi Arabia and other Arab oil producers that support Iraq have re-duced their subsidies to Baghdad from about $12 billion a year to about $6 billion because of financial difficulties caused by the world oil glut and weakening petroleum prices, according to a U.S. esti-

The result is that Iraq's coffers have been depleted, its morale has been sapped and the regime in Baghdad has felt increasing strain. The leaders in Baghdad are reported to have calculated this summer that if these problems continue, they will lose the war to Iran, which is able to export more than two million barrels a day through the Gulf and is building its strength is in sharp and painful contrast to the high stakes involved, officials said. end to the war," an official said. Another said that in recent conversations Iraq has made clear that the question is not whether to use enhanced military power to attack Iranian oil facilities, but when to do

> Iraq's reasoning, as Washington officials understand it, is that attacks against Iran's oil export facil-ity at Kharo Island or other targets in the Gulf would subject Iran to the same squeeze that Iraq faces. If Iran retaliates, as its leaders have threatened, by closing the entire Gulf to oil shipping, Iraq is said to believe that the West is likely to intervene to reopen the vital artery, bringing U.S. and European forces into direct clashes with Iran.

■ France Dodges Questions France's foreign minister.

Claude Cheysson sidestepped tions Sunday on when the five jets had left France, where they had gone and why they had been delivered despite international pressure on France to reconsider the deal, Reuters reported from Paris. He referred in a radio interview

"these planes which have perhaps been delivered, which have perhaps not been delivered."

Mr. Cheysson repeated that France's aim in selling the fighters was to give Iraq the leverage need ed to force Iran to end the Gul conflict through negotiations.

But while he said he took Iranian threats of reprisals against France and Western oil supplies seriously, he dismissed speculation that the delivery of the five fighters could provoke a new escalation of the

U.S. May Bar Products Made in Soviet Camps

By Kenneth B. Noble New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The commissioner of customs has recommended that three dozen products made in the Soviet Union be barred from the United States because he has reason to believe that they were made with the help of forced labor.

The commissioner, William von Raab, said in a letter to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan that he had information that "reasonably indicates" the products were mann factured with the help of prisoners or other forced labor. Any ban needs the approval of the Treasury

There have been reports that Vietnamese and other Asians were among those being used as forced laborers in the Soviet Union, most recently in construction of the natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Western Europe. Those who saw copies of the "With this letter, I ask permis-

Although the value of these items has not been estimated, most government officials say they represent a fairly negligible portion of U.S.-Soviet trade.

Mr. Raab said that if his recommendation was followed, "customs vote on the resolution asking his officers will be instructed to withhold release of any such articles' imported from the Soviet Union.

In February, Lawrence S. Eagleburger, undersecretary of state for political affairs, said in a letter to Senator William L. Armstrong, a Colorado Republican, "It is well known that forced labor has been used on pipeline projects in the past and we have evidence that it is being used now, as well, in domestic procline construction.

Mr. Raab has been mentioned as possible replacement for Lawrence J. Brady, an assistant secretary of commerce, who is an ardent opponent of trade with the Soviet

Mr. Brady has been at the center of battles in the Reagan administration over trade sanctions that he and others proposed to punish Moscow, apparently in reaction to the Soviet downing of a South Korean airliner.

Mr. Brady recommended that the Reagan administration deny an export license sought by a subsidiary of the Hughes Tool Co. to sell $40 million worth of oil exploration equipment to the Soviet Union.

That touched off a conflict in the administration over its trade policies. Currently, the administration restricts the sale of most high technology equipment to the Soviet Union. But the administration has permitted the sale of such pipeline construction equipment as conven-tional drilling ries that involve less advanced technology.

Most recently, equipment to fielp lay pipelines has been removed from the restricted list. Dennis Murphy, a customs service spokesman, said Friday: "We received a number of inquiries from a broad range of senators and representatives urging us to take action on this issue." He said that Mr. Armstrong "has met with the commissioner and has particularly

Bomb in Burma Kills Key S. Korean Officials

RANGOON, Burma - A bomb Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea exploded at a memorial site here Sunday, killing four of his cabinet sunday, ruling four or his cabmer ministers, his ambassador to Bur-ma and several of his highest aides. The governments of Burma and South Korea said 16 South Koreans and three Burmese journalists were killed by the explosion at the Martyr's Mausoleum in Rangoon minutes before Mr. Chun arrived for the ceremony, They said at least 48 people were wounded, including two Burmese cabinet ministers and 15 high-ranking South Koreans.

South Korean officials accused North Korea of engineering the ex-plosion, which devastated the senior leadership of Mr. Chun's government. It came on the first day of a scheduled 18-day presidential goodwill tour to six Asian nations.

Burmese and South Korean officials said Mr. Chun and his wife immediately flew back to Seoul, canceling the remainder of the trip. In Seoul, police sealed off the air port before the arrival and stopped reporters from entering.

Prime Minister Kim Sang Hyup held two emergency cabinet meet-ings in Seoul, decreed a national ilert for the armed forces and sent an emergency medical team to Rangoon to care for the South Korean wounded.

Witnesses and government ac-counts said Mr. Chun's car was three minutes from the memorial site, where he was to lay a wreath, when a tremendous explosion shattered the mansoleum's roof.

once again the true nature of North Korea as a barbarous international terrorist group,'

President San Yu of Burma said the authorities from South Korea and Burma were investigating the blast and vowed that the bombers "shall not go unpunished."

In a statement broadcast on state radio, the Burmese president called the explosion a "premeditated and dastardly act of the terrorists who attempted to discredit and disrupt the harmonious and cordial relations" between Burma and South Korea. But he did not specifically accuse North Korea, which also has diplomatic relations with Bur-

Reagan Policy Toward Soviet Union Colored by Pragmatism and Politics

By Leslie H. Gelb

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan's poicy toward the Soviet Union is becoming highly pragmatic, seriously confused or heavily political, depending on who is doing the explaining.

grain for foreign policy reasons and overruled subordinates who wanted to deny Moscow oil and gas drilling equipment.

Last week, he ordered compromises to be made in the strategic arms talks though Moscow's negotiating position has been essentially unchanged. The Soviet Union is at once "the evil empire" to be shunned and confronted mainly with military might and so important as to be the beneficiary of virtually unilateral U.S. concessions Some administration officials describe this kind of compartmentalization as proof of a new realism. Perhaps if the condemnations were less absolute and the concessions less significant, his actions would suggest just such a new balance and sophistication. But to many administration officials, conservatives and pragmatists alike, as well as some outside experts. the extreme of both sets of actions points toward other explanations -- toward a mixture of disorder and expediency. Administration officials acknowledge that neither

Mr. Resean nor his senior advisers have much expert knowledge of the Soviet Union or arms control. It is also no secret that White House political advisers feel that foreign policy could hurt Mr. Reagan in the presidential campaign and that arms treaties with Moscow would soften his hawkish image.

Officials are also well aware that congressional support for increasing military spending would lessen there were no visible efforts at achieving arms control It is also true that the White House feels that simultaneous bipartisan backing for more arms and for arms control is the best way to bargain with

Mr. Reagan's way of getting this backing, by all accounts, was simply to tell his reluctant aides last week essentially to accept the new strategic arms ideas of a few key legislators and members of his Commission on Strategic Forces.

The result was a grafting of the administration's initial tough approach onto a quite different and more

The history of the administration's arms control olicies has become a kind of metaphor for this mixture of pragmatism, politics and confusion.

The administration brought people to power who never tried to hide their conviction that Soviet leaders lie, cheat and seek world domination. These officials feel that their time in office has only confirmed their worst fears. But in almost all other respects, their deeds have not fit their early words. At first, they maintained that the Soviet Union had strategic superiority and that Washington could not negotiate until new weapons were deployed and a balance achieved.

Then several months ago and before any new weapons had been deployed or the presumed imbalance righted, these officials began to say the necessary momentum in new weapons programs had been achieved and that was sufficient.

They labeled the unratified treaty on strategic arms as practically treasonous, yet promised to observe it and ended up accusing the Soviet Union of violating

Tories Report Infiltration by U.K. Rightists

LONDON - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative

Party has been infiltrated by rightist extremists, a party report said Sunday, after the Conservatives had been embarrassed by the love affair of a cabinet member. The report by the Conservative's youth wing cited more than a dozen cases of former members of the National Front, a rightist extremist group, running on Conservative tickets in local elections. When news surfaced of the report, the party announced that it was tightening selection procedures for parliamentary candidates. The report was commissioned by the former party chairman, Cecil Parkinson, 58, who is Mrs. Thatcher's trade and industry secretary. Mr. Parkinson's love affair with his former secretary, who is pregnant, has led some party members to say they would seek his resignation at the Conservatives' annual confes-

The line to which 37-year-old Renzo Renzi, a Communist since he was 17, and Germano de Biagi, a 34-year-old Socialist, succeeded Saturday, taking the place of two physicians, is long not only because it is more than 700 years old but also because San Marmo has maintained its democratic government at the cost of letting no one rule alone or for very long.

NEW DELHI (AP) - The Indian government ordered additional security forces into the troubled state of Punjab Sunday after Sikh gammen wounded two people, authorities said. Officials in Punjab said police and paramilitary troops marched through the streets of Amritsar, Juliandur, Ludhiana and other sensitive towns.

The Sikh-dominated northern Indian state was declared a disturbed region and police and military were given emergency powers last Friday to shoot rioters on sight, search homes and make arrests without warrants. Earlier, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's federal government took direct control of the state administration.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman refused to confirm or deny the report. There was no official comment from Turkish or Soviet officials.

Informed sources in Ankara, who requested anonymity, said Saturday that the general had been flown to the United States. They said the defection took place several weeks ago but could provide no details on the general's identity.

In Tokyo, police reported that a 52-year-old Soviet scientist had left Sunday for the United States after being granted political asylum there. The scientist, Yevgeny A. Novikov, a physicist and member of the Soviet Academy of Science, said he was seeking academic freedom.

PARIS (Reuters) --- A Turkish-born Armenian suspected of designing a bomb that killed eight persons and wounded 54 at Oriy airport south of Pans last July has been charged with attempted murder, court sources

Nayir Soner, 22, was flown to Paris under heavy police escort after his arrest Saturday at Marseilles's Saint Charles railroad station, where he had arrived on an overnight train from the capital. Police sources said that six other Armenians had been detained since Thursday and were being questioned on the suspicion that they may have sheltered Mr.

Mr. Soner landed at Orly's southern terminal, the site of the July 15 explosion, and was taken to a court in the Paris suburb of Creteil where he was charged with attempted murder and with being an accomplice to murder, the court sources said. Police sources said Mr. Soner was believed to be a leader of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, which claimed the blast, and that he was suspected of designing the firing circuit for the explosives.

Americans Define Ideal President By Personal Qualities, Poll Finds

NEW YORK — Americans cite personal qualities more often than olitical ones to describe their notion of an ideal president, according to a New York Times-CBS News poll.

Most of the 1,587 respondents to the poll, which was conducted between Sept. 24 and Sept. 28, could name as many as three key qualities they consider important in a president. But the survey found that only one-third of them could think of someone in public life who came close to embodying those attributes.

President Ronald Reagan was named as meeting the ideal more than any other individual, but just as many people mentioned various. Democrats as mentioned Mr. Reagan and other Republicans.

came closest to the representing the qualities they deemed important in a president. One woman named former Representative Bella Abzug of New York, a Democrat; another nonmated Senator Namy Landon Kassebaum, Republican of Kansas; and a min said Shirley Temple Black, a former ambassador to Ghana, would be his ideal.

Thirty-five percent said honesty was one of the three most impor-tant qualities a president could have. Fighteen percent listed compassion and 17 percent intelligence. These trafts were mentioned more often than a variety of leadership skills or any other grouping of qualities. Interviews with some of the poll respondents indicated that there was no clear relation between the qualities people mained and how they were tion on global security, and full Socialist embrace of NATO's projected missile deployment. The list skips over arms deals, support for African autocrats, and business-more-or-less-as-usual with South Africa.

If the Socialist voter is confused or disappointed by the actions, he can always listen to the words. While his government swells the share of the military budget for nuclear weapons and sends its Super Étendard fighters to bombard Syrian positions near Beirut, at least the talk stays "progressive" and Third Worldly. Indeed, at the United Nations General Assembly the week before last, Mr. Mitterrand called for two successive international conferences that would reduce arms expenditures and then transfer the savings to the

More than two years into the president's seven-year term, French foreign and security policy can occasion-a dream-sequence soundtrack. But no matter if the activism and the verbalism do not match. At home, Mr. Mitterrand has never been hurt because of a foreign policy decision. Rather, those Socialists who expected the president to close the French African bases, leave the West German garrisons, and mothball the fleet now talk about "realism in defense of the cause of peace."

Outside France, the president's friends and adversaries have come to judge him only by what he does, with Mr. Mitterrand gaining considerable respect in the process. The Russians have found his government continually mistrustful of them, and unresponsive on

Perhaps the president's most ingenious bit of foreign policy activism in Europe, as well as his most nificant gesture toward Moscow, was his speech in the West German Bundestag that warned of false notions of disarmament and the dangers of Europe and West Germany decoupling themselves from the United States.

If the analysis of Franz Joseph Stranss, the conservative West German political leader, is correct, the speech meant extra percentage points to Chancellor Helmut Kohl in the March elections, and the victory of a security policy in West Germany that Mr. Mitterrand believes vital for the balance of power in Europe and the independence of France.

has got used to a French reflex to see faults in almost anything the United States can undertake as an acceptable trade-off in a basically good working

In the case of Chad, the French did not like (in spite of the contradictions) the Americans pushing them into intervening, muscling into their zone of influence, and then taking out the U.S. surveillance aircraft. But the tension was verbal; France got involved, stopped the Libyan advance, and fulfilled the role of West African policeman that the Socialist election campaign criticized so harshly in 1981.

The same kind of process took place in Lebanon, with the French criticizing the U.S. naval shelling in support of the government of Amin Gemayel, and then attacking Droze-Syrian positions themselves. The best explanation of the pattern is that it is important for the government and its followers not to seem dragged along in the wake of the Americans.

Finding little to criticize in Mr. Mitterrand's foreign policy that could excite public opinion, the French right has taken to saying it is not very original. Worse, wrote the conservative Le Quotidien de Paris, "it is lined up with that of the United States in spite of all the canned anti-American potshots."

France's difficulty in running its policy, particularly in relation to the United States, is apportioning its limited means. In some cases, pragmatism has submerged original intentions. An example is Nicaragua and Latin America, where the government sought potential conflict with the United States too great.

French fears had a flutter last week. Along with the horror scenario of an effectively neutralized West Germany that would end its buffer role between France and the Soviet bloc, the government constantly worries about some kind of Soviet-U.S. arms limitation agreement that would go behind its back and legislate the French-nuclear force into insignificance.

Mr. Mitterrand has dealt with the issue by saying France will have nothing to do with the Geneva talks in progress. But while he was talking at the United Nations, Vice President George Bush suggested in Washington that at one point or another the French and British nuclear forces would have to come into the

The formula was vague enough for the State De-partment to try to finesse it and the government did not press the issue. But it troubled people in France because it goes to the heart of what has the feel of a tacit, quid pro quo arrangement between the Socialists and the Reagan administration.

That understanding says that France and the United States can work in concert and in confidence in many areas if France is not pushed into the nuclear counting game. Through Prime Minister Pierre feeling an elbow, all the other bets could be off.

Reagan Says Influx of Soviet Arms Raises Doubts on Damascus's Goals U.S. involvement in the Middle By Bernard Gwertzman

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan says that a "massive" influx of new Soviet military equipment into Syria, including an advanced SS-21 missile system, has caused the United States "to wonder aloud" about Syria's interest in peace in the region. In his weekly radio address Saturday, Mr. Reagan confirmed U.S. intelligence reports that the SS-21, a surface-to-surface mobile missile with a range of about 75 miles (121 kilometers), was being introduced in Syria. From Syria, the SS-21 would be able to hit targets in Isra-el, in Lebanon and on U.S. Navy ships in the Mediterranean.

Although Mr. Reagan said the missiles were already in Syria, U.S. intelligence officials believe they are still en route, with only the launching vehicles and storage facilities in Syria now.

Administration officials said Mr. Reagan was trying to express the concern felt in Washington over Syria's activities, and in particular the major increase in Soviet arms was also expected to m and personnel. He also justified the non, Reuters reported.

U.S. Admits It Overstated Aid To Areas Hurt by Peso's Fall

By Wayne King New York Times Service

HOUSTON --- Nearly $100 million described by the Reagan administration as aid to areas burt by devaluations of the Mexican peso went to underwrite offshore oil rigs built in Mississippi and for the development of rental property near Palm Springs, California, federal officials say.

Much of the rest of the total of about $116 million described as aid to areas near the Mexican border is money that was previously ear-marked for border areas under existing federal programs, the administration confirmed.

Border area officials say some existing grant programs have been accelerated because of the peso crisis but that very little new money has been made available.

Critics say the administration's labeling of existing funds as border aid is a suggestion, for political purposes, that there is new aid money when there is not. They say there is no suggestion of misuse of funds, but rather, a misrepresentation of reality.

President Ronald Reagan, after a trip to the stricken border area, set up the Southwest Border Action Group in mid-August and ap-peared to give it significant influ-ence in the administration by appointing Vice President George ation.

The disclosure by The El Paso Times, which serves a depressed border area, that a loan guarantee of $94.8 million to Global Marine Inc. of Houston had actually un-derwritten private financing for three oil rigs already built brought sharp reaction from border officials, notably Representative Ron Coleman, a Texas Democrat whose district includes El Paso.

In a statement through a spokesman in Washington, Mr. Coleman said that "the credibility of the vice president's border working group has been called into question and may be seriously damaged."

He added that the border working group was "a misleading grand-stand play by the administration to make it appear that the horder region will receive more assistance than it accord m it actually will."

In Washington, Shirley Green, a spokeswoman for the vice president, read a statement from Global Marine, conceding that the loans guaranteed by the government, through the the Department of Commerce, had been used to mderwrite three rigs already in oper-

But the company maintained

Global Marine said in its statement that "the timely delivery of this rig will insure the contin workers at the facility."

However, there was no direct financial connection between the loan guarantee and the construction of the new rig, nor any demonstration that it would not have been built anyway, with or without the guarantee of an unrelated loan to a partner in the construction. Mr. Bush's spokeswoman conceded, moreover, that Global Marine's participation in the construction of the rig represented about $11 million, not $94.8 million.

Although she maintained that the listing of the loan guarantee was justified, she confirmed that none of the money designated as border aid was new money specifi-cally earmarked as such. "That is going to be true of all those that are going to be done," she added.

The administration was also criticized by Mr. Coleman for including a $4.3-million low-interest goverument loan to construct privately owned housing for the elderly in Cathedral City, California. The loan was listed as one of the border

LISBON - President Samora Machel of Mozambique, on a visit to Portugal, has blamed South Africa for instability in southern Africa.

Mr. Machel, who began a five-day visit on Friday, was speaking at a dinner given in his honor Saturday by the Portuguese president, Antônio Ramalho Eanes, Mr. Machel said: "It is the racist regime of South Africa which is responsible for the insecurity, for the climate of instability and for the threat of a generalized war in our negion."

Mr. Machel likened the South African government to that of Nazi Germany, saying it used the same methods of aggression, intimidation, blackmail and propaganda.

Mr. Machel, whose Marxist government came to power when Mozembique became independent from Portugal in June 1975, also urged greater cooperation between the two countries. He said Mozambique has overcome the divisions of the 10year war for independence, of which he was a leader. # Midwest Farmers, Starting to Fight Back, Seek New Allies

By Andrew H. Malcolm

New York Times Service CHICAGO - About 60 angry farmers, who had tried to protest a farm foreclosure by occupying a bank, were standing around in the sun on the main street of Stockton, Kansas, the other morning. The farmers, from several surrounding counties and states, broke up into several discussions on where their region's protest movement should now direct its attentions.

But soon they gravitated to the fire hydrant where a muscular black man with braided hair had begun to lecture. "You farmers are so dumb," said Ernie Chambers, a state senator from Omaha. "They are going to pick you off one by one like this. Do you hear what I'm saying? # U.S. Is Urged to Step Up Anti-Missile Laser Work

Mr. Weinberger is expected to make his decision this week or next on the recommendations of the commission, which was headed by the former National Aeronautics and Space Administration director, James Fletcher. It was established after President Ronald Reagan's speech earlier this year calling for a major new effort to find some space defense against ballistic mis-siles.

A Rare Public Squabble Embarrasses Sweden's Nobel Literature Panel

By James M. Markham

New York Times Service STOCKHOLM - It has been some time since the venerable Swedish Academy, founded in 1786 by King Gustav III, has been

The high point of the staid academy's yearly cycle, the solemn an-nonncement of the Nobel Prize in Literature, was marred Thursday by a sensible over the merits of its own decision. As the afternoon newspaper Expressen observed Friday, the dispute was "unique in the entire history of the academy." For all its global renown, the Nobel Prize in Literature, and the people who give it, are regarded by Swedes with good-immored fami-iarity and affection. They are alive to the ties of the 18 cultural barrons of the Swedish Academy — their likes and dislikes, the authors that some of them have translated into Swedish, then promoted for the prize, and other foibles.

When October comes, Stockholm taxi drivers weigh with an air of insight and discrimination the claims of minored Nobel prize candidates. This year there was a growing conviction that it was time for another woman - Marguerite Yourcenar of France, Doris Lessing, who was born in Rhodesia, or Natine Gordinaer of South Africa. Five of the 80 Nobel laureates have

For the man in the street, the academy's choice of William Goiding the 72-year-old British novel-ist, at least had the ment of not being esoteric. Within minutes of the ritual 1 P.M. announcement of the winner at the stock exchange, Stockholm bookstores were dusting off copies of "Lord of the Flier" for their show windows.

But for Artur Landkvist, one of the most influential members of the academy and a headstrong grand old man of Swedish letters, the choice of Mr. Golding was an affront. And, breaking a pledge of silence that the jury takes about its own deliberations, the 77-year-old poet and essayist did what has never been done before.

He told reporters that he did not think Mr. Golding deserved the prize. And then he boycotted the academy's traditional lunch at the Gyllene Freden restaurant in the Old City. The restaurant's name means "golden peace" — something the academy longs for today.

Since he was appointed to the academy in 1968, Mr. Lundkvist, an authority on Spanish, French and Italian writing, has translated his views into prizes. The Lundkin 1977 of Vicente Alexander, the Spanish poet, and in 1971 of Pahio Neroda, the Chilean poet.

Mr. Lundqvist, a radical prole tarian novelist in his youth and a 1958 winner of the Lenin Peace Prize, has reged the jury toward bold, experimental and revolutionary writers. He has been this kind of writer himself. -He has moved out lynical sad socrealistic books with such titles as Bridges of the Night," "Life as Grees," and "Darunga, or the She-Wolf's Mills." Two years ago, he had a heart stack and was in a come for four months; he is now writing an account of the decame be had while ancouncions. Mr. Böll, 66, who won his Nobel prize in 1972, is a tweaker of bourgeois foibles, an enemy of tyrannies large and small, an anti-militarist and a doubter. Now he has turned his doubts, and his prestige, to issues of peace and nuclear war.

In September he and his wife, Annemarie, decided to join the peaceful blockade of a U.S. military base at Mutlangen, where Per-shing-2 missiles are to be deployed in three months if U.S. and Soviet negotiators in Geneva do not come to a compromise first. Why did the Bölls go to Mutlangen?

Philippine Opposition Attacks Bush's Remarks

MANILA — A Philippine oppo-sition leader has lashed out at the U.S. vice president, George Bush, saying he "put his foot in his mouth" by defending President Ferdinand E. Marcos against accusations of political assassination.

Anti-government protesters continued demonstrations Saturday for the fourth straight day and renewed accusations that Mr. Marcos had engineered the Aug. 21 assassination of the opposition leader, Benigno S. Aqui The attack on Mr. Bush was delivered Saturday by René Espina, leader of the United Nationalist Democratic Organization, in response to Mr. Bush's remarks Thursday that Filipinos have accused Mr. Marcos of the Aquino assassination "before the jury went out"

Mr. Bush also compared Mr. Marcos to the late Shah of Iran, implying that criticism of the Iranian monarch's human rights record led to the rise of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and even worse human rights violations.

Mr. Espina said: "At a time when Filipinos believe that Marcos's authoritarian regime is responsible for the murder of Acuino, at a time when Filininos are suffering imprisonment, torture, disappearance and deaths for believing in and for trying to reestablish a democratic government, Mr. Bush has again put his foot in

Mr. Esoina said. Mr. Bush made that remark while toasting Mr. Marcos during a visit to Manila in June 1981.

In Hot Springs, Virginia, Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth W. Dam said Saturday that the Philippine government would make "at some point" and the United States hoped for moves toward democracy.

The government in San José feels pulled in two directions as it con-siders how to deal with the fighting. according to Costa Rican and foreigh sources

It would like to stay out of trouble and concentrate on solving its economic problems, notably a ponderous foreign debt. This desire has led to sporadic arrests of Nicaraguan guerrillas found in Costa Rica and seizures of arms destined for the insurgents.

But the government seems to be worried over what it sees as a po-tential threat to its stability posed by the consolidation of a Marxist government in Nicaragua. As a result the authorities have shown some laxity in efforts to halt the activities of the Nicaragnan insurgents, according to guerrilla and diplomatic sources.

Costa Rica is also planning to order a drastic curback in the number of personnel at the Nicaraguan Embassy, a Foreign Ministry official said. Nicaragua has about 80 employees at its embassy in San José, while Costa Rica has fewer than a dozen in Managua, he said.

The Nicaraguan government, meanwhile, is worried about the intensification of guerrilla attacks, according to officials in Managu "It appears that the forces of aggressiveness are becoming stronger," a high-ranking Foreign Min-istry official said in an interview. "It could be the prelude toward a change in Costa Rican policy."

"They're caught in a kind of trap," said a West European diplomat. Officials sympathize with the alliance, but "realize that it could be the source of a lot of trouble," the diplomat said.

The Democratic Revolutionary Alliance is one of two guerrilla groups battling Nicaragua's Sanlinist government. The other is the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, which is based in Honduras and is known to receive funding from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Costa Rica permits the alliance to have its political headquarters in San Jose, but authorities insist that they do not allow the alliance to have military bases or transport weapons inside the country. Foreign journalists who visited the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance's main military camps last month confirmed that they were located in jungles on the northern, Nicaraguan bank of the San Juan River, which marks the border with Costa Rica. But alliance officials said in San José that they funnel some arms from Costa Rica in wooden canoes with outboard motors and by jeeps.

"We have no arms here, no military bases. But to ship arms is another thing," a high-ranking alli-ance official said. "In the struggle, we have to conspire."

The official said that the group passes only a minority of its arms through Costa Rica, apparently to avoid compromising ment as much as possible. He said that most of the arms come in small boats or planes from countries to the north, including Honduras and El Salvador.

Brazilians Growing Rebellious Over IMF-Imposed Sacrifices

By Stephen Kinzer

New York Times Service RIO DE JANEIRO - Last posals. week, in the midst of a debate over austerity measures that the International Monetary Fund has asked Brazil to adopt, Representative Mario Juruna leaped to his feet in Facing a hushed chamber, he bitterly attacked the economic policies of President João Baptista Figueiredo and his principal adviser. Minister of Planning Antônio Delfim Netto. "To me, every minister is a thief," he declared. "Every minister is without shame, every minister is dishonest."

Mr. Juruna, the only full-blooded Indian in Congress, became an instant hero of the political opposition. At a rally in Rio de Janeiro called to protest Brazil's agreement with the IMF, demonstrators chanted, "Juruna is right, Delfun is a thief!"

Encumbered Build-Down

The Reagan administration has finally negotiated a strategic arms deal — but only with key members of Congress, not with the Russians. The flexible-sounding proposal for a "build-down" — trading safer new warheads for unsafe older ones - is a nod to some American legislators to win their support for missile budgets. But it has been grafted to a familiar demand that Moscow restructure its missile forces much more than Washington.

Even if not thus encumbered, the builddown would require years of negotiation and a decade or two to accomplish. The best way to get there is still through a compromise on pending proposals for sizable cutbacks.

The appeal of the build-down is that it would reward the superpowers for shifting to less threatening missiles while they modernize. For example, deploying a desirable, mobile single-warhead missile might be allowed for dismantling only one old warhead. But building an undesirable, immobile multi-warhead missile might require dismantling two old warheads for every new one, President Reagan's new proposals adopt this idea, contributing significantly to the arms discussion.

But Mr. Reagan's proposals demand a si-multaneous build-down in "destructive capacity," or missile throw-weight, which is just another way of again demanding sharp cuts in Soviet land missiles. It is unrealistic — even in return for the cuts in American bomber payloads that may now be offered.

The most valid concern of the Reagan administration arises from the asymmetry in Soviet and American strategic forces. They are roughly equal in total destructive power, but much of America's force is in relatively unthreatening, second-strike weapons aboard submarines and bombers, while most Soviet power is in multi-warhead land missiles that pose a theoretical "first-strike" threat.

What is worrisome in this imbalance, however, is not the size, the throw-weight or the accuracy of Soviet missiles, as the Reagan administration contends. The danger lies in nulti-warhead missiles facing immobile mis-siles, producing a theoretical "exchange ratio" advantage for a pre-emptive first strike — an attacker's calculation that he could spend one missile with 10 warheads to destroy five enemy missiles with 50 warheads.

Abandon multi-warhead weapons and a first strike becomes unthinkable: It would take at least two single-warhead missiles to destroy one enemy warhead, and an even greater ratio to take out mobile weapons. Stable deterrence in the longer run requires a gradual shift to single-warhead missiles. But to keep focusing on throw-weight is to keep asking the Russians to scrap half of their land forces. They will not do that any time soon, and stability has to be improved initially in other ways.

The obsession with throw-weight also gets in the way of two promising arms control concepts. One is the Scowcroft commission's endorsement of shifting to single-warhead missiles. The other is the build-down idea advanced by Senator William Cohen, Representative Albert Gore and four colleagues. Both groups agreed to support the MX missile in return for acceptance of their ideas. But the administration accepts those ideas more in principle than in deed. It is pushing for a 10warhead MX in vulnerable silos, not for a mobile one-warhead Midgetman.

The build-down idea, in any case, cannot be attained in less than 10 years. It is the most complicated arms control idea ever.

In the meantime there is no reason for not seizing on the pending offers of reductions. The Russians have proposed cutting the missile and bomber ceiling of 2,250 in the unratified SALT-2 treaty down to 1,800; the United States has proposed about 1,600. That is a negotiable distance. By converting those numbers into warhead equivalents, Mr. Reagan might be able to achieve much of the cutback he initially proposed, from about 7,500 to 5,000 missile warheads on each side.

Something along these lines is said to have been urged by the State Department in recent days. Such a reduction would set the stage for build-down and represent a valuable achieve-

The Lebanese Question

a Lebanon, a real nation underneath the torment and the fractures, or whether the original Lebanese idea of a community of communities is simply a historical anomaly or colonial artifice whose time has come and gone.

There is an element of unfairness in calling upon Lebanon to address that question. The question is in many ways offensive; other countries, hardly less ethnically splintered and embattled, are not often called upon to address it. The political circumstances, however, make it unavoidable. For the very suggestion, which is more than a suggestion, that Lebanon is not a real nation, that its plainly existing hatreds and divisions are its ultimate reality, is feeding a go-with-the-flow movement to "ratify" this reality in the form of either a partition into Syrian and Israeli buffer spheres of influence, or establishment of "cantons" to house the separate communities.

In a sense, the United States is already a party to this hidden concept. The American political system was convulsed by the first keeping force. There is scant evident taste for much further expenditure of American resources in behalf of the longtime formal goal of Lebanese integrity. In Lebanon the suspi-

The question of Lebanon is whether there is cion lingers that Washington bought the Gemayel government some part of the recent cease-fire by winking at Syria's Lebanese in-terests and clients. Add the interest of many American diplomats in weaning Syria from Soviet patronage to the traditional American favor for Israel and you will understand much about the anxieties of the Lebanese.

We think it is wrong to yield lightly to the "reality" of no Lebanon. To do so would mean backing off from a decades-long commitment to its integrity — a lapse that would rebound throughout the area, and not only there. There is no denying the immense contribution that Lebanese have made to their own despair. But there is also no denying - here the "realists" come up short - the immense contribution made by intruding foreigners: most grievously the Palestinians, but also in their respective measures the Israelis, the Syrians and others.

The current thrust of U.S. policy is to walk the Lebanese toward internal political reform, and in that way to firm up the sense of nationhood and the authority of the central government and convince Syrians and Israelis that their interests can best be served if their troops move back behind their own borders. It is a risky uphill policy, but it deserves a fair trial.

when six present or former U.S. senators and a former governor of Florida joined at Town Hall in an atmosphere more of celebration than of competition. The campaign began months, years ago - back in January 1982, say, when a Democratic rules commission met in Washington and supporters of Walter Mondale and Edward Kennedy worked the smokefilled room with skill. As the months passed there have been caucuses and cattle shows and endorsements. But in a real sense that has all been preview, all New Haven. On Thursday the seven announced Democratic candidates joined together for the first time.

Senator John Glean bristled when a questioner compared his feat in space to jumping a river canyon on a motorcycle. Senators Alan Cranston and Ernest Hollings sparred about what it meant to vote for a Reagan tax bill. Reubin Askew, President Carter's trade negotistor, challenged Mr. Mondale to tell why he favors inhibiting free trade. But that was about the extent of the disagreement. Who is most for the War Powers Resolution or reliable

The 1984 presidential campaign, it might be said, opened on Broadway Thursday night for human rights or against the "feminization" for human rights or against the "feminization of poverty"? They all would.

Still, the position of each and all was demonstrably different from that of a president with decidedly harsher views of cities and the poor. The early focus on New York is not just an exercise in provincial longing for the glory days when New York was the biggest state and to be its governor was to be America's crown prince. Opening on Broadway fastens the candidates' attention on urban needs and values - which, as Senator Gary Hart pointed out, are so well illustrated in New York. New Yorkers can be more liberal, knowing intimately about the needs of the urban poor and about the poorhouse duties that America imposes on its big cities. They can also be more conservative, knowing intimately about fiscal crisis and about crime. And sometimes their interests are simply special. As Governor Mario Cuomo observed of the seven candidates, "I'm sure they were surprised to hear the question about a special envoy to Ireland raised at every forum." — THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEW YORK - The mortality of clerks' and office boys' relatives is alarming. It is estimated that two thousand grandmothers had died. Wall Street, in a body, was at the funeral at the polo grounds. From a Wall Street point of view, war clouds and politics are trivial matters until the pennant is decided. The few brokers left on the job brought in their luncheon, as there was no one to keep their offices. Hundreds of special parties from Wall Street went to see the final game and millionaires had to stand in line with tickets. By defeating New York by 4-2, Chicago again won the National League baseball championship. The biggest funeral procession that the world ever saw filed out of the Polo Grounds.

This was because of other substantial events, among them a fresh flood of contradictory and confusing dispatches from Washington concerning the prospects of currency inflation, the most serious break in the bond market in many months, and, finally, the amazing revelation that the Stock Exchange really was very much in earnest in its plan to move, bag and baggage, from Wall Street to Newark.

Under an Anti-Intellectual Presidency

PARIS — The Reagan administration is the first American presidency since Franklin Roosevelt's to have come to power as the expression of a set of ideas — of a new intellectual movement in America. The Kennedy campaign in 1960 had plenty of intellectuals in it, who took over Washington when John Kennedy won the presidency, but it cannot really be said that they represented something new. They stood firmly in that line of liberal thought and practice that began in domestic policy with Roosevelt's New Deal and in international policy with Yet he was the candidate of those writers and thinkers known as the neo-conservatives, who represent a revisionist reaction to years of liberal domination of government, universities and the press.

Woodrow Wilson's Fourteen Points.

They stand for a revised economics, monetarist and keyed to the free market, and for heavy reliance on private initiative in social and economic matters. They are, most of them, relatively uncritical admirers of capitalism in its American form. In foreign policy they are ferociously anti-communist — with the same intransigence that most of them devoted to Trotskyism or socialism at the beginning of their careers.

Yet when Ronald Reagan won the presidential election in 1980 it was not Irving Kristol, Norman Podhoretz, Midge Decter, Robert Nis-bet, Seymour Lipset, James Q. Wilson or George Will who moved into the offices which 20 years earlier had been occupied by Harvard and MIT intellectuals, Mr. Reagan invited the neo-conservative editors, professors and writers to dinner, but, with the exception of Jeanne Kirkpatrick of By William Pfaff

Georgetown University, who is now ambassador to the United Nations, he did not give them responsibilities for U.S. policy.

The people to whom he did award power were nearly all from business circles, the military, even from entertainment, few of them with any intellectual pretensions. Secretary of State George Schultz is the closest the Reagan administration has to a professional thinker, but he was formed as a university economist and has not proved very effective in controlling a presidential foreign policy that more and more has be-come a matter of ineffectual shows of force in situations (Lebanon, Central America) manifest-ly ill-understood — the kind of thing that can eventually undermine a nation's authority, and which invites miscalculation.

The administration distrusts the universities and all but the most conservative research institutions. International exchanges involving Russians are considered dangerous, tainted by detente. Federal funds have been reduced or cut out for scholarly enterprises of the sort which in the past have routinely included Russians. Such non-governmental groups as the National Academy of Sciences have picked up sponsorship of some of these exchanges, but the official policy community in Washington is being cut off from international dialogue and exchange, and even from the university circles where this takes place.

That is bad for the Russians, who in the past have learned serious things from such exchanges, and for the United States as well. It reinforces the tendency among Americans, intellectuals and government officials assuredly included, to disregard foreign realities and take the United.

States as the norm — refusing "any other posi-tion but No. 1," as helmsman Dennis Conner put it minutes after the Australians had proved that in 12-meter racing, at least, the United States is certainly in position No. 2.

Academic intellectuals in government are no unmixed blessing, and it could appositely be argued — most appropriately by a neo-conserva-tive intellectual — that a president of the United States does better to rely on practical men and women of affairs, professional managers and career diplomats. This, though, is not what the Reagan administration has done.

In too many areas Mr. Reagan has handed power to crossies and amateurs, and these amateurs are enforcing amateur standards upon the career professionals in government. This inevitably does damage to government's functioning, but also to America's reputation abroad as a competent and serious nation.

These people also are cutting off the government from the larger intellectual community in the United States — from the universities and those independent research institutions which since World War II have cooperated with government and helped to make it work.

One would think that this does Mr. Reagan no good, since any president needs all the help he can get, even from intellectuals, neo-conservative or not. But does he understand that this is so? The problem is that ignorance has been institutionalized. H.L. Mencken said of American government at the time of the Harding-Cox campaign in 1920, "One may howl over the show without any measy reminders that it is sections, and that someone may be hurt." That, of course, is today just what we can no longer do.

To Achieve Arms Control You Have to Want It

WASHINGTON — When AverWell Harriman arrived in Moscow in the summer of 1963, a reporter least have been "locked in" to the Kennedy took the initiative to break asked how long it would take him and his team to negotiate a ban on nuclear tests in the atmosphere. Thinking fast, Mr. Harriman decided to send a signal to the Kremlin. "About two weeks," he answered, "if Premier Khrushchev wants a treaty as badly as President Kennedy does."

Just 13 days later, as Mr. Harriman recalled to an audience gathered last week to honor him and the 20th anniversary of the Limited Test Ban Treaty, the work of the Soviet-American negotiators was done.

That was possible, he said, because both sides wanted a treaty. And he added that his only regret, two decades after that first arms control success, was that "we didn't go after" a comprehensive treaty that would have banned nuclear tests underground as well as in the atmosphere, the oceans and space.

Had such a treaty been concluded then. Mr. Harriman observed, many nuclear weapons systems that now threaten the world could never have come into existence.

Jerome Wiesner, who was President Kennedy's science adviser, also suggested that the moment might have been lost in 1963. Speaking earlier at the dinner sponsored by the Arms Control Association, he said Mr. Kennedy had been greatly encouraged by a tour of Western states 20 years ago this antumn, during which crowds had roared approval of the Limited Test Ban Treaty.

Mr. Wiesner said Mr. Kennedy told him that if he had realized how much public support there was, he might have been more willing to insist on a comprehensive test ban. The issue arose again during the Carter administration when the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union virtually completed a Comprehensive Test Ban (CTB) treaty in which for the first time. Moscow agreed to on-site inspections as part of the necessary verification procedures. Paul Warnke, then the U.S. negotiator, told the andience that he now wondered whether higher priority should not have been given to the CTB rather than to SALT-2, which ultimately was not ratified.

Mr. Wiesner and Mr. Warnke agreed that in the Kennedy administration, as later under President Carter, opposition within the U.S. 20vernment — in the Pentagon, in Congress, at the national nuclear laboratories - as well as in the "military-industrial complex" and the press had been a bigger obstacle than the Soviet Union to agreement on a comprehensive test ban.

We don't have such a treaty, Mr. Warnke said, "because we don't want it." Instead, internal pressures to continue testing for new nuclear weapons systems and to improve old ones have been too strong.

Another former Carter administration official suggested in a private conversation that, owing to internal U.S. government opposition to a comprehensive treaty, the better course might have been to concentrate on a treaty banning all tests except those of relatively low yield. That way, he said, Moscow might at concessions --- such as on-site inspections — that it had been willing to make in the CTB negotiations. McGeorge Bundy, President Kennedy's national security adviser, recalled for the dinner audience the sequence of events leading to the 1963 Test Ban Treaty. In late 1961 the Soviet Union conducted a series of atmospheric tests, breaking a moratorium that had been observed by both sides. The United States responded with a test series of its own, and in the summer of 1962 Moscow embarked on still another round of testing.

But this time, Mr. Bundy said, Mr.

the cycle, deciding, in effect, "OK, you have two series and I have one. And it doesn't matter." Ultimately, in his American University speech of 1963, Mr. Kennedy pledged again that the United States would not test in the atmosphere if no one else did. Three weeks later Mr. Khrushchev replied favorably, and Averell Harriman was sent to Moscow.

The resulting treaty, Mr. Bundy said, "was the most constructive event I was ever associated with." But he warned that it would be harder now to achieve a comprehensive treaty because, ironically, the public's fear of nuclear fallout from atmospheric tests — "the most compelling single force" behind the 1963 treaty had been eliminated by that treaty. Moreover, Mr. Bundy pointed out, the "range of armaments" on both sides is far more complex now.

For these reasons and due to continuing opposition within the U.S. government, Mr. Bundy said, no major arms control agreement could be achieved without "the authority of the president's voice" forcefully taking the lead in seeking it.

As for Mr. Harriman, he saw a clear lesson in the experience of 1963 and of a U.S.-Soviet treaty successfully observed for 20 years. "There's no reason," he said, "to be afraid to make agreements to limit arms."

The Geneva Talks Look Foredoomed

GENEVA — As the countdown continues for deployment of new American missiles in Western Europe, the nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva are taking on the atmosphere of a diplomatic wake. Yuri Andropov, with his denunciation of President Reagan and the latest American move to open new doors in Geneva, has ruthlessly quashed even the faintest flicker of one for a last-minute breakthrough. Moreover, through various chan-nels Moscow Union has warned Washington that it can expect a complete rupture of both the Intermediate Nuclear Force talks and the parallei Strategic Arms Reduction Talks once the NATO deployment of new missiles gets under way this December in West Germany and Britain. So the current round of nuclear negotiations is likely to be the last one for many months. The hiatus is likely to be a long one.

A breakdown in Geneva may be

going to be that easy for the Europe-an countries where the Pershing-2 and cruise missiles are to be emplaced - West Germany in particular, along with Britain and Italy, and then Belgium and Holland, where cruise missiles are not scheduled to be deployed until 1985 but where the political opposition is strongest. It is not so much a "hot autumn" of anti-nuclear demonstrations that worries the NATO governments as the prospect of a "hot spring," with the nuclear buildup going on and no talks in progress in Geneva that might offer at least a semblance of hope that somehow another spiral of nuclear weaponry can be contained. The prospect is equally evident to the Soviet Union, and it is likely to harden the Soviet leadership in its determination to negotiate nothing in Geneva but instead to break off the something the Reagan administra-tion feels it can live with, but it is not the politics of 1984 to unfold in the talks and to sit back and wait for

United States and Western Europe. If the talks are broken off, it will not be hard to make clear to the people of Europe where the responsi-bility lies. The difficulty will come if the NATO governments have to go through 1984 with no progress in the effort to reduce nuclear arms.

"The simple truth," a senior American official said recently, "is that there has never been any negotiation at all here on the intermediate-range issiles in the last two years. "If you go all the way back to 1979, when NATO took the decision [to deploy Pershing 2 and cruise mis-siles], it was laid down in Moscow that the aim of Soviet policy would be to block the weapons from arriving in Europe at all," said the official, who declined to be identified. The hope had been that this basic Soviet position would give way to reality as deployment day approached. But it has not. There will be a lot of pieces to be picked up and put back together again in 1984. Los Angeles Times.

Regarding "Europe Worries About Lebanon Role" (IHT, Sept. 26) by John Vinocur:

A poll carried out last month by the independent Macno institute and widely publicized in the Ital-ian press on Sept. 25 found that 58.2 percent of Italians desired the immediate withdrawal of their national contingent from Lebanon, and that a further 26.6 percent were ready to accept its continued presence in Beirut exclusively on the condition that it should in no way become involved in war activities and that its function should continue to be strictly limited to the protection of the civilian population, in particular the Palestinian camp population, in West Beiret. If this is "no bring-the-boys-home ground swell," what is?

Italy and the Lebanese Mission

Likewise, it is completely false that "the only opposition to an Italian military role in Lebanor has come from the Communists and far-left spinter groups," or that "parliamentary debates have reflected pride in so exceptional an assignment." In the first place, leftist parties reflect more than one-third of the national vote — not exactly a marginal proportion. Secondly, the movement calling for the withdrawal of the Italian contingent from Lebanon was launched and continues to be animated by the very military assigned to Leba-non, and their families, who by no stretch of the imagination can be classified as being only leftists. The latter have addressed to President Sandro

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Pertini a petition in which the withdrawal request is motivated by the fear — anything but irrational — that the humanitarian peace mission originally assigned to the contingent might be transformed, due to the renewed outbreak of the hostilities, into one involving war activities.

Thirdly, had Mr. Vinocur made the slightest effort to consult the parliamentary record, he would easily have found out:

that similar concern has been expressed in parliamentary debates by a broad spectrum of senators and deputies, including members of ma-jor government parties such as the Christian Denocrats and the Socialists and excluding only the extreme right-wingers and notoriously fanatic supporters of U.S. power politics;

that any expressions of "pride" that has been voiced in the debates related indeed to the fact that, differently from the U.S. and French troops in Lebanon, the Italian contingent has so far not been assigned a military role but has on the contrary maintained its civilian protection function, mainly around the Palestinian camps, carrying it out to the best of its ability (although within the very lamentable limits imposed upon it by the political agreements), for example in regard to the prevention of kidnappings and arbitrary arrests of civilians by the official and unofficial Phalangist squads of the Gemayel regime;

that in marked contrast with Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini — whose Republican Party represents 5.1 percent of the Italian vote and whose main concern is to prevent any dissociation of the Italian position from that of the U.S. administration — both Prime Minister Bettino Craxi, a Socialist, and Foreign Minister Ginlio Andreotti, a Christian Democrat, have pledged that no change would be operated in the role so far assigned to the Italian contingent in Lebanon, in a war-involve-ment sense, unless such change should be decided by Parliament, which is more than doubtful

A large majority of Italian public opinion con-tinues to seek withdrawal of the contingent from Lebanon and replacement of the multinational force now stationed in that country by a United Nations-controlled peacekeeping force.

By Barry Sussman

WASHINGTON — For months, W opinion polls have projected.

John Glenn as a stronger candidate than Walter Mondale or any other. Democrat against Ronald Reagan in 1984. The reason most often cited is Senator Glenn's appeal to independent voters, the largest swing group in any presidential election.

"Go with the candidate who can win" has been the main theme of Glenn supporters. Is that message correct? Are the polls really saying there are many who would support-Mr. Glenn but not Mr. Mondale?

The simple answer is yes, but equally important is that there are many who say they would support. Mr. Mondale but not Mr. Glenn. There is little difference between thepercentage of Mondale-yes, Gleanno voters and the reverse group.

A Gallup survey, issued in September, showed Mr. Mondale ahead by 49 to 30 percent among Democrats, with 21 percent undersided. That is still a substantial lead for Mr. Mondale, but it is down eight points from-the Gallup Poll in Jane, when 57 percent of Democrats interviewed were for Mr. Mondale, 31 percent for Mr. Glenn and 12 percent undecided.

The effect of Mr. Glenn's "He can. win" strategy seems to be to make people think twice about Mr. Mondale. Voters and state party organiza-tions do not seem to be jumping toward Mr. Glenn but are moving from Mr. Mondale to "undecided."

Much of that shift comes from voters who very much want a Democrat who can win, and are therefore receptive to Mr. Glenn's message. But if those Democrats study the full picture, the Glenn theme could end up. as less important than now.

Taking the results of the last three Washington Post-ABC News poils and looking at them as one — in order to have larger, more reliable numbers to work with — the electorate in a mock campaign looks like this, omitting the undecided:

18 42 percent of the voters support
Ronald Reagan against Mr. Mondale or Mr. Glenn; 44 percent support either Democrat against Mr. Reagan 18 Slightly over 8 percent support Mr. Glenn over Mr. Reagan, but prefer Mr. Reagan over Mr. Mondale; slightly under 6 percent support Mr. Mondale over Mr. Reagan, but prefer. Mr. Reagan over Mr. Glenn.

So there is a 2-point difference, between the numbers of those voters. who like Mr. Glenn but not Mr. Mondale and vice versa.

If the difference between the pro-Mondale, anti-Glenn vote and the reverse is so small, why have Glenn . supporters been able to make so much effective use of the numbers? For millions of Americans, President Reagan, by his commanding-presence and his ability to get his way with Congress, has dispelled the myth that "it doesn't matter who is elected, nothing ever changes," Things have changed, substantially. Correct or not, the slogan "He can who care more about the outcome than they did four or eight years ago.

The Glern camp has played on that appeal for all it is worth.
But there is a second reason. The arithmetic in the three Post-ABC News poils lends some credence to Mr. Gienn's slogan. The 2-percent advantage does mean the difference between winning and not winning, or-more accuately, between being and not being ahead at this stage. In the Reagan-Mondale trial heats, the president gets his 42 percent plus the 8 percent who say they would. vote for Glenn but not Mondale. That makes the outcome 50 percent for Reagan, 50 percent for Mondale.

In the Reagan-Glean trial heats, Mr. Reagan gets 42 percent plus the 6 percent who say they would vote for Mondale but not Glenn. The outcome is Reagan 48 percent, Glenn 52. People often ask what effect polls have on elections. The answer from most polisters has been that polls have no discernible effect. If Mr. Glenn is successful, however, the polls will have had a major impact for . 1984, for they will have sustained him at just the point when he might have fallen into the pack with the rest of the Democratic hopefuls. Early this year, Mr. Moodale and. Mr. Glenn both held commanding. leads over Mr. Reagan, but Mr. Glenn was not far ahead of the four. other Democrats who were then seeking the nomination. But starting in March, as most citizens began to perceive that America was in a period of economic recovery, Mr. Reagan became stronger in the polls until the stage of equilibrium—for Mr. Glenn—was reached. It was Mr. Reagan's improvement that enabled Mr. Glenn to burst away from the pack. In the same sense, poll results in the next few months could be crucial. Many Democratic organizations are doing what many of the rank and file have been doing: switching from Mr. Mondale to undecided. In Massachusetts, Governor Michael Dukakis was expected to en-dorse Mr. Mondale months ago, but any Dukakis endorsement is now in abeyance. The same is true of Gover-nor Mario Cuomo and Democratic organizations in New York and inother states. Democratic leaders are waiting to see what the polls say. The stronger Mr. Reagan gets, the better for Mr. Mondale, since if he and Mr. Glenn fell substantially beand Mr. Glenn fell substantially behind, the "He can win" alogan would be of little help. Mr. Mondale would also profit if he and Mr. Glenn reestablished strong leads in trial heats against the president.

But if the polls continue to postern race that is really too close to call, the 2-percent edge could previal for Mr. Glenn. Three of the last six presidential elections were decided by less than 2 percent of the vote. And these days, perhaps more than in 1986, the emocrats look as if they will want their candidate to win.

By Carl Gewirtz

International Herald Tribune PARIS — Bankers agreed to to-ken reductions in Brazil's new rescheduling charges last week, cutting some $55 million off commissions and about $12 million in annual interest charges over the next nine years compared with the fees Brazil paid last year. The view of members of the 60-bank committee coordinating the rescheduling is that fees (cut to ] percent from 1½ percent last year) and margins (cut ¼ point to 2 points over the London interbank offered rate, also known as Libor, or 1% points over the prime rate) applied to the proposed new loan of $6.5 billion and the rescheduling of $5 billion of debt falling due next year have a minimal bearing on whether Brazil's 800 creditor banks agree to go along with the restructuring.

The decision to participate is simply not rate-sensitive, members of the coordinating committee assert. They explain that the reduced fees are aimed at facilitating the Brazilian government's ability to win domestic support for the austerity measures that were required by the International Monetary Privately, bankers acknowledge that the question of fees and margins is superfluous. "They can't afford to pay a margin of 2%, or 2 or 1 point," snaps a U.S. banker. Europeans agree. "The only so-

We're four times as international as we were a year ago.

In the first half of 1983, we carried four times as many major stories on international business as a year before.

In addition to giving all our readers more basic worldwide coverage, we also gave readers in Europe, Asia, and Latin America additional stories that appeared only in our international edition.

These special stories were edited specifically for their interest to business executives outside the U.S. Each was written with the depth, authority, and thoughtfulness that have earned FORTUNE the respect of business leaders everywhere in the world.

It's this unique editorial coverage that makes FORTUNE INTERNATIONAL the only real international edition of an American business magazine. No wonder it's been such a success, with a circulation rate base that started at 70,000 and jumps to 90,000 as of January 1, 1984. You can reach these decision-makers, and all of FORTUNE's subscribers worldwide, with remarkable efficiency. For more information, call your FORTUNE representative.

HOOPLA By Harry Stein. 366 pp. $14.95. Knopf, 201 East 50th St., New York, N.Y.

Reviewed by Jonathan Yardley

T HE "Black Sox" Scandal of 1919, in which eight members of the heavily favored Chicago White Sox conspired to throw the World Series to the Cincinnati Reds, was an event that far transcended the limited houzons of the world of sport. World War I, which had ended a year before, had mocked American innocence in an orgy of meaningless bloodshed and agony; now the Black Sox Scandal compounded the nation's brutal introduction to life's realities by showing that baseball, a game generally regarded as uniquely American and thus uniquely virtuous, was as susceptible to manipulation and chicanery as any of society's supposedly less scrapulous institutions.

Not surprisingly, the scandal has produced over the years a considerable body of legend and literature. From the myth of Shoeless Joe Jackson ("Say it ain't so, Joe") to F. Scott Fitzgerald's mordant immostalization of the gambler who "could start to play with the faith. of 50 million people - with the singlemendedness of a burglar blowing a safe," the scandal has inspired more comment and reflection than many events of seemingly greater magni-tude. But it has never inspired a work of senious fiction — scenes and vignettes and references, yes, but never an entire novel.

Until now, that is. Harry Stein, who writes an interesting column about ethical questions for Esquire magazine, has attempted to fill the void in this first novel. To the extent that he raises some pertinent themes and makes some provocative comments, he has succeeded. But as a work of fiction, "Hoopia" suffers from debilitating weaknesses, the most serious of which is an utter lack of anything resembling a center, it is offered as a novel about the Black Sox Scandal, but from the way it wanders this way and that, ambling off into fruitless digres-sions, it hardly seems a novel about anything at

It has two narrators. The first, and the most interesting, is a New York journalist named Luther Pond, an entirely fictional character; he is an old man as he writes this memoir of his early newspapering days. The second is Back

Weaver, who played third base for the Black Sox and was one of the eight men eventually barred from organized baseball for his role in the scandal; he is a historical figure to whom Stein, following current fashion, has chosen to give a new life as a character in a work of

Pond's narrative is the more appealing, not-withstanding his cymicism and self-aggrandize-ment, because he writes in an amusing proce style and has a knowing eye for the shortcom-ings of ballplayers and the sporting crowd. His judgment is that baseball players, "though often ignorant, occasionally illiterate and invariably less interesting than anyone else one dealt with in the course of life, tended toward blosted self-esteem." But his attempts to insunate this view into his reportage are strongly resisted by his editors; when one tells him that "we happen not to be in the business of hero reduction in this paper," he speaks to one of Stein's central themes — that the Black Sox Scandal was the beginning of the end for the blind hero-worship in which athletes then

As for Weaver's narrative, it suffers from Weaver is represented as lawing written his sections of the lack sections of the book, they have the sound and rhythm of speech. The second, and the more sectors, is that Stein places too heavy a maintive responsibility on someone he did not invent; that Buck Weaver was a real person is a truth from which the reader never manages to escape, and the knowledge of this is an amorying constant. It is never more so than when Weaver writes about his extramunial affair with a woman in St. Louis; since Weaver apparently has no direct descendants; there is no one around to object to this except the reader who feels it is one thing for Stein to put a historical figure in a work of fiction and another for him to play fast and loose with that figure's private life.

Be that as it may, Skin's "Weaver" addresses important points when he complains about the exploration of ballplayers by the mognis of the exploration of banpingers by the mognis of the game; as in by now generally accepted, a principal reason why the scandal occurred was that all but a few White Sox players were deeply angered, with ample reason, at the ways they had been cheated by the team's owner, Charles Comiskey, and this question Stein handles with considerable skill. As expressed by Weaver, his rueful but accurate point is that "the national game is a business, like shipping or something like that, and the magnates do what they please."

If Stein had stuck to this point and to the particulars of the Black Sox Scandal, he might have pulled off the might be the particular of the Black Sox Scandal, he might have pulled off the mixture of fiction and fact that "Hoopla" aspires to be. But more than 250, pages have passed before 1919 is reached, and precious few of those pages are pertinent to anything except a rambing divagation on hero-worship and the relationship between hero ethiletes and the journalists who can make or break them. "Hoopla" goes off in so many directions that in the end of goes nowhere. This is a pity, because Stein is a decent writer and esting things to say...

game into extra innings. "So many things went through my mind today. I don't think I've ever had so much on my mind in one game," said Baltimore's manager Joe Altobelli, who watched 13 Chicago runners reach base.

After the game, Altobelli did not run on the field to join the celebration. He sat in the dugout and took in the scene. "How can you weigh success if you've never failed?" asked Altobelli, adding, "I was so exhausted that I just wanted to sit there, he down and sleep.

"Pete Rose said it. The playoffs are the real cruncher. The World Series is a cup of tea. I think that replacing Earl Weaver [as Oriole manager] was terrific . . . now."

A jubilant Edward Bennett Williams, the Orioles' owner and a prominent lawyer, said, "Maybe someday there'll be a court case that feels as exhibirating as this. But there hasn't been one vet."

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Phillies, with the oldest lineup in baseball, overpowered the Los Angeles Dodgers, 7-2, Saturday and won their second National League pennant in four years.

They took a 3-0 lead in the first inning when Gary Matthews hit his third home run in three games in the playoff. Then they entrusted their fortunes to Steve Carlton, the 39-year-old ace of the staff, who pitched six innings of six-hit ball before leaving with back spasms but with the prize in sight.

So, before a roaring crowd of 64,494 in Veterans Stadium, the Phillies won the best-of-five championship series, three games to one, to thrust themselves into the World Series, the fourth championship se-ries in the 100-year history of the club. They will open it Tuesday night in Baltimore with John Denny pitching with five days of rest. To get there, the Phillies have had to survive some formidable trials. They had four players over 40 and two pushing 40. They dis-missed Pat Corrales as manager in July and turned his job over to Paul Owens, the 59-year-old general manager. Then the team rebelled when Owens juggled the lineup, benching senior stars in favor of young players.

In the playoff, they faced a Dodger team that had beaten them 11 times in 12 games during the season. The Dodgers had beaten the Phillies out of the pennant in 1977 and 1978 and had won four playoffs in the last decade without

But the Phillies surmounted all the omens and won in four games. "To me," Owens said, "this is a season I will never forget. As general manager, I saw between 155 and 158 games a year. But this season, I'm down here sweating with the guys and I'm close to everything. This season is something very spe-

"They played very great ball when they had to," said Tommy Lasorda, the Dodgers' manager. It was a clamorous evening that opened with a dazzling display of fireworks over the stadium. Then, for a few moments in the first inning, it looked as though the Dodgers would shoot off a few rockets of

Then the Phillies went to bat Reuss retired Joe Morgan and Pete Rose, but before he got anybody else out, three runs crossed.

Mike Schmidt singled up the middle. Sixto Lezcano singled to left, bringing up Matthews, who hit the second pitch, an inside fastball, over the fence in left field and into the balcony seats.

He now had five hits in a row, a record for a National League play-off. He also had knocked in eight runs, tying another record. And, with three home runs in three games, he tied the playoff record set in 1969 by Henry Aaron.

Carlton now had a 3-0 lead, and he protected it until the fourth inning. Baker led off by hitting the second pitch over the left-field fence for a home run. Then Marshall lined a double into the corner. Steve Yeager was struck on the foot by a low slider, and the Dodgers had men on first and second with nobody out.

But they were undone by another base-running mistake by one of their young players. Bo Diaz, the catcher, saw Marshall too far off second and whipped the ball to Ivan DeJesus, the shortstop, who had slipped in behind the bag. Marshall tried to scramble to third but was run down by Schmidt.

Carlton erased the rest of the threat by striking out Ken Landreaux and Derrel Thomas.

The 3-1 lead was not safe, because Carlton seemed less than commanding. By the time he got the Dodgers out in the fifth inning, he had thrown 98 pitches. He got help in the fifth, when Rose led with a single to right. Schmidt fol-lowed with a double to the wall in left center, and Rose scored. That made it 4-1, and Renss was gone.

Ron Reed replaced Carlton in the seventh after the Phillies increased the lead to 7-1.

To Split or Not to Split?

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — When teen-age infinitives get ants in their pants, they will say to each other: "Let's split." Their stodgier parents, suddenly afflicted with a splitting Jordache, ask themselves: grammar two generations ago, Why do so many infinitives split these days?"

For centuries, writers have been Warned to avoid splitting infinitives. To split gleefully is preferred; to gleefully split is frowned upon For some reason, the insertion of an adverb between the to and the rest of the verb in its infinitive form causes most arbiters of newspaper style to say sternly: "It is to laugh heartily," and never: "It is to heart-ily laugh."

For example, when Charles M. Lichenstein, the deputy chief of the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, felt provoked by Soviet slurs on American hospitality, he said: The United States strongly encourages member states seriously to consider removing themselves and this organization from the soil of the United States." He went on to say: "We will be at dockside bidding you a farewell as you set off into the sunset."

An alert Wall Street Journal editorialist quickly pointed out the metaphoric "difficulty of sailing into the sunset from New York harbor." The United Nations' location on the East Coast permits sailing into sunrises only.

However, a transcript of the United Nations tape shows Lichen-stein to have hewed strictly to the grammarian's delight in the use of the infinitive: "Seriously to consider" shows that the statement was composed with great care. Most people would have said "to seriously consider."

"In general," generalizes the Associated Pres, "avoid awkward constructions that split infinitive forms of a verb. . . . Awkward: She was ordered to immediately leave on an assignment. Preferred: She was ordered to leave immediately on an assignment."

But that's not the problem at all: Most of the time, the split infinitive looks natural and the unsplit form looks pedantic. To strenuously object is certainly as natural to the tongue and eye as to object strenuously, and both are less awkward than strenuously to object.

The real problem is this: If neither way is awkward, is it right and proper to split the infinitive? Who has attached a stigma to the placement of the modifier in the middle?

Not the great grammarians. George O. Curme, the superstar of wrote: "Since the 14th century

. the split infinitive, by virtue of its decided advantages, which are unconsciously widely felt, has been gradually gaining ground.
... Although this new drift has long been regarded by many who do not understand it as plebeian or vulgar, there have never been any real grounds for such an attitude, for it has never been characteristic of popular speech." He cites Abra-ham Lincoln's plea to border states for compensated emancipation:

"How much better to thus save the money which else we sink forever in the war?" That is more graceful than thus to save or to save thusly.

Henry Fowler agreed, "A real s.i., though not desirable in itself, is preferable to . . . real ambiguity and to patent artificiality." He chose the infinitive-splitting to bester equip, rejecting to equip better as "ambiguous (better an adjective?)" and better to equip as "a shouted reminder of the typenum" of satisfireminder of the tyranny" of artificiality in the pedant.

If you want to emphasize a point, splitting an infinitive is a good way to do it. In light of all this, I recommend that infinitive splitters of the world unite: We have nothing to lose but our hang-ups. If we want to touch lightly on a topic, we should preserve the integrity of the infinitive form; if we want to viciously savage it, we are free to split the infinitive to smithereens. No stigma attaches to the splitting, nor did it ever in the minds of many of the most prestigious usagarians. Let us put the modifier in the place - before the to, just after it, or after the verb - where it works

If you are not satisfied with the Voice of Final Authority booming in this space, listen to George Bernard Shaw, creator of 'enry 'iggins: "Every good literary craftsman splits his infinitives when the sense demands it." He called for the immediate dismissal of the pedant hired to chase split infinitives and concluded: "It is of no consequence whether he decides to go quickly or to quickly go."

There's a Lot More to Vocal Terminology Than You Suspect

By Donal Henahan New York Times Service

NEW YORK — What's an "A-flat tenor?" It's a male creature with an upper voice constricted in range and quality, just as you might guess even without looking up the term in Cornelius L. Reid's "A Dictionary of Vocal Terminology." But is an "A-flat tenor" different from a "necktie tenor," and if so, how? What does it mean to say that a singer is "chewing bread" or "drinking in the tone?" What is the difference between a tone with "ping" and one with "ring?"

I have been enjoying myself recently by reading Reid's discus-sions of such questions in his new dictionary, a 478-page volume published by Joseph Patelson Music House and priced at $39.95. Perhaps the book's chief value, aside from any pleasure or enlightenment it may provide to ordinary music listeners, lies in its attempt to bring order out of the terminological confusion that besets the vocal profession. Listening to singers and their teachers try to explain their theories you realize what the construction workers on the Tower of Babel must have been up against. The words, having no commonly ac-cepted meanings, become a jum-ble of sense and nonsense. Teachers often use the same words to mean opposite things: Reid insists that the phrase "too far back" actually refers to a tone that is produced too far forward, because of a constriction high in the pharyngeal tract. In this, as in many similar instances, what a singer or teacher may be feeling and trying to describe may quite different from what is taking place physiologically.

bate that has raged among voice teachers, especially in this century, can be explained by their reliance on just such loose talk. "A Dictionary of Vocal Terminology" is an attempt to impose some standards on this messy situation, calling as much as possi-ble on scientifically ascertainable evidence but also attempting to promote agreement on certain commonly used terms such as

ble." Reid, who has written several books on voice training, is a practical man who can content himself with a curt definition when a longer one would belabor the obvious ("In Voice: being in good vocal form"). But when the subject is one that singers, singing teachers and even informed laymen may disagree about, he is happy to pile on the facts and to marshal them in support of his own pedagogical theories. He gives 11 pages to "Breathing," for instance, eight to "Falsetto" and five to "Lowered Larynx."

One discussion in depth concerns the ancient question of voice registers, which under various categories and subcategories runs to 16 pages. For centuries, theorists have not even been able to agree on the basic question of how many registers there are. A minority has contended that there is only one register, that the ideally trained voice has no natural separations. But most opinion is divided between two-register (chest and head) and three-register (lower, middle, upper) theories. Reid favors the two-register theory, which formed the basis of most training methods before the invention of the laryngoscope in 1854. He inclines toward the view that much of the study of voices by laryngoscope has been scien-tifically invalid. He favors calling the two registers the "chest" and the "falsetto," a terminology that prevailed through much of vocal history and that Reid justifies by citing modern evidence that I do not intend to go into here because nical, of course, and will interest only his fellow theorists. Probably not many singers could, if put to the test, tell you where their posterior cricoarytenoid is located, let alone say what purpose it serves. However, this is a reference book that anyone interested in singing can dip into with profit. Do you want to know the difference between "heroic tenor" and "dramatic tenor"? (For one thing, the heroic tenor's natural tessitura or most comfortable average range is slightly lower than that of the dramatic tenor.) Should a soprano be pleased or insulted if you say her tone is "sweet"? How about "mellow"? (Both are derogatory words in Reid's vocabulary.) Does the "passaggio" or "break" occur in about the same place for both male and female voices? (Yes.) What is the difference between the vocal organs of men and women? (No difference except size, according to those who have measured excised larynxes.) what is meant by "placement," "marking," "covering" and "belting?" What, exactly, are "floating," "focussed" or "dark" tones?

Do you know what the "gag reflex" is and what function it may play in vocal training? (Touching the tongue with a finger releases ing performance.) Among many authoritative-sounding but highly suspect terms tossed about in discussions of singing are "head resonance," "chest resonance," "mouth reso-nance" and "nasal resonance." This is another instance where subjective impressions parade as facts. Reid says research has proved that virtually all voice resonance takes place in the throat. or more specifically in the trachea, larynx and pharynx. The tone only seems, in some deplorable cases, to be coming from a sinus, left nostril or unfilled wisdom tooth.

heavily populated with charla-tans and incompetents, as well as a few genuine artists who rely on pure intuition to guide their students, it is safe to predict that Reid's dictionary will stir up antagonism. I myself am particularly disturbed to be told that head resonance plays no part in tone production since I have long believed unquestioningly in the old saying that a tenor's resonance takes place in the space where his brains should be. I also expect that some singers, probably not tenors, will be annoyed at Reid's discussion of the brain's function in singing. He contends that sound-making instincts and what he calls the "singing sense" are centered in the cerebellum or "small brain." For that reason the singer who relies too much on the cerebrum or larger brain is hard to teach: "It is a notorious fact that the 'intelligent' singer rarely sings ci-ther well or 'naturally,' i.e., spontaneously." Because of the perverse sort of universe we live in, small-brain singers and their teachers probably will not bother to consult this book. There will still be a lot of talk about "projecting the tone through the top of the head," "placing it against the front teeth" or "feeling the vowel between the eyes." But Reid has provided a context in which even such possibly useful, possibly destructive free-form deas can be talked about system-Considering the confused history of vocal teaching and the fact that the field has always been ment.

JERUSALEM POSTCARD

Historic Shopping Mall

By Jonathan Immanuel The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Five years ago.

Jerusalem's ancient main street was no more than a black strip on an obscure map and a glimmer in the eye of a determined archaeologist. Today it is Jerusalem's smartest shopping mall.

The Roman-Byzantine street, 1,400 years old, presents the visitor with a striking combination of old and new. Ancient columns and remnants of arches blend with sparkling boutiques selling art, books and high fashion.

The reclaimed 200-yard stretch of street is the showpiece of reconstruction work on Aeolia Capitolina, the Roman city built on the ruins of Jerusalem's Jewish Quarter, which Emperor Hadrian razed in A.D. 135. Archaeologists and architects have remodeled the road, called the Cardo Maximus in Latin, using remnants of walls, arches, pillars and stones recovered from a sixfoot-deep accumulation of debris. Smart, modern shops have been built in the alcoves from which Byzantine merchants sold their wares 14 centuries ago. On the stumps of ancient pillars, a roof of cross-vaulted arches has been built in the style of the Christian Byzantine architecture which replaced.

the Roman fashion.
"It makes me feel like I'm back in time. It's not like a shopping mall at all. It's more like a muse come to life," says Hava Mandell, 21, a Canadian Jewish immigrant who works in a fashion boutique on

The Cardo built by Hadrian was much longer, but most of it is bur-ied and cannot be uncovered without endangering the warren of buildings that makes up Jerusa-lem's old walled city.

However, the entrance gate to the Roman road and a few yards of paying have been excavated near the city's Damascus Gate and it is now the oldest paved path in use in Jerusalem. Older street stones were uncovered on the street that Christains believe was the Via Dolorosa, the one Christ followed to Calvary. But these have not been made into a continuous paved path.

The Byzantines built their own extension of the Roman Cardo, but it gradually disappeared under cen-turies of destruction and rebuilding, and was only uncovered when Appeal in Los Angeles.

Quarter. The Cardo's existence first came to light in 1884 when a mosaic map of the Holy Land was uncovered on the floor of a Byzantine Church in Madeba, Jordan. The Cardo was marked by a black strip through the center of the map, but archaeologists saw little chance that it could be found. However, 78-year-old Dr. Nahman Avigad, the archaeologist who dug up the ancient Jewish Quarter, persisted in searching for the Cardo, and finally uncovered it. He also found remains of the ancient Babylonian and Roman walls around Jerusalem.

These walls, deep below the Cardo, can be seen through grill-covered chates embedded in the street. Also on display are Babylo-nian spearheads and stone missiles from a Roman cataguit. The weapons, found in the ruins, were believed to have served the Babylomans in 586 B.C. and the Romans in A.D. 70, during the two sieges of Jerusalem in which the Jewish Temples were destroyed.

veral pillers with Corinthian apitals from a covered colomnade have been recovered and erected in an open courtyard on the road. They are 15 feet high and the road 33 feet wide. The road was twice as wide when built, but cannot be fully uncovered lest the upper city

Entry to the Byzantine Cardo is through an archway that abuts the Arab market. The Jewish Quarter was partially destroyed and taken over by Arab families following the 1949 partitioning of Jerusalem. Af-ter 1967, the Israelia cleared out.
